WITH THE FARMERS

By Prof. W. F. MASSEY

(Letters addressed to Professor Massey must have stamp inclosed for answer.)

Bedding Sweet Potatoes.

"I intend to bed 209 to 300 bushels of sweet potatoes for producing sale plants. I am not sure that I can get manure enough to make a hotbed for them all. I have noticed last spring that you say you bed them in sand in frames under glass sashes. I have about 100 sashes that I can use, but would have to haul sand from a distance. The beds have had a good deal of manure, as I have been growing lettuce in them. Would it do to put them in without more manure? How them in without more manure? How deep should the seed potatoes be covered? Some varieties seem to sprout better than others, but I must have all the varieties called for. What temperature should the beds be for the best results?" If you make a hotbed can get fine leaf mold from the woods, and this will do very well to cover the potatoes about three inches. The important matter, as well as heat, is grass, the best of all pasture grasses to maintain moisture in the bed by the mixture for pasture—

the mixture for pasture—

the mixture for pasture regular watering with tepid water when needed. You can make a hotbed sufficient for sweet potatoes with about eighteen inches depth of manure, and use cotton cloth as a cover to the frame. Cover the manure three inches with light soil or leaf mold, and let the heat rise and decline to about 80 before bedding. I get stronger and better rooted plants in sand under Growing Lettuce in Spring. "I have a lot 150 feet square, which want to plant in lettuce for the home market. The land was plowed last fall, and has had manure spread on it this winter. The land is bottom land, and I think some lime will help. Would it be better to use the ground limestone or the air-slaked lime, and, how much on such a lot, and what would be a complete fertilizer to use, and how much? Will irrigate the plot." Leave out the lime. The lettuce does not need it, and will thrive best if the soil is somewhat acid, if you fertilize heavily. You must fertilize heavily to make good lettuce, and manure and fertilizer both are needed. Buy a ready-mixed fertilizer with a high percentage of nitrogen and phosphoric acid and a small percentage of potash: I use a fertilizer made here that has 7 per cent ammonia, 6 per cent phosphoric acid, and 5 per cent potash. For lettuce I would prefer it 7-8-3. Of you can buy ground limestone or the air-slaked best results?" If you make a hotbed under glass sashes for sweet potatoes it should not be a very deep or hot one. That is, not so deep a mass of nanure as would be used in a hotbed for starting seed early. I have found that after the polatoes are bedded in a cold frame, I can get all the heat needed by leaving the sashes closed until signs of sprouting appear. Then, of course, air must be given. If sand is not convenient, then perhaps you can get fine leaf mold from the woods, and this will do very well to cover the posture grass on upland.

10 lbs. Orchard grass.
8 lbs. Kentucky blue grass.
4 lbs. Red top.
5 lbs. of Alsike clover.
5 lbs. of white clover. For the meadow I would leave out the word "permanent," or you can get more hay by growing it in the general rotation, and not moving more than two or three years, and for hay there is no better mixture than—10 lbs. of timothy. 10 lbs. of red top. 8 lbs. of red clover.

You can also make a good meadow mixture with— 10 lbs. of Tall Meadow Fescue (Randall grass).

10 lbs of Tall Meadow oats grass.

8 lbs. of red clover.
